

12. | You never ask the waiters what's good. You ask what they'd order themselves.

13. | The way you always walk just a little too fast, like you're chasing the next idea.

14. | You judge umbrellas by their handles.

15. | You treat buying olive oil like buying a house.

16. | The way you never travel without a book... and somehow always bring it home with the bookmark still on page twelve.

17. | The way "Vediamo..." has become your most optimistic way of saying "I have absolutely no clue."

"Vediamo"

18. | The way you still buy beautiful fountain pens, convinced this one will finally improve your handwriting.

19. | The way you remember conversations... and completely forget birthdays.

20. | The way you pretend not to be sentimental. Then keep every handwritten note I've ever left you.

21. | The way you still buy beautiful fountain pens, convinced this one will finally improve your handwriting.

22. | The cashmere jumper you refuse to replace. At this point, I suspect it's part of the family.

23. | The way every dog seems convinced you've met before, assuming you're one of the good ones.

24. | The way your jacket pockets contain everything... except the one thing you're actually looking for.

25. | You refuse to throw away cables because "they might belong to something."

26. | You always carry a pen, just in case. The case never comes.

27. | You always know where North is. Nobody knows how.
